MINISTER TERRELL'S ADDRESS.

A Problem About a Texas Statesman That Seems Easy Till One Tries it.

A New York business man had occasion yesterday to send a letter to Alexander W. Terrell, until lately United States Minister to Terkey.

The matter was one of considerable importance, and the business man, after writing the letter, started to address the envelope. After he had written the diplomat's name, he paused to think of Mr. Terrell's address. He did not have it in mind and he called one of his clerks to supply it. The clerk went to the correspondence files and the firm's address book. Mr. Terrell's name was not there. The clerk fussed around the office for half an hour, and was obliged to report then to half an hour, and was obliged to report then to half an hour, and was obliged to report then to half an hour, and was obliged to report then to half an hour, and was obliged to report then to half an hour, and was abliged to report then to half an hour, and the business and the half and half always ready to play a game.

very wise man. He draws pay for being a very wise man.

So Jones was consulted. At first he smiled the same kind of smile that Smith had used when the question was put to him. Then he pot some mysteriou-looking books cat, taking them from far-away corners. He rattled the pages for fifteen minutes. Then he pushed the books aside.

"I'm very busy just now and haven't time to bother with such questions," he said. He had stopped smiling.

Smith went down to his office. He was angry. One of the private telegraph wires that connected his office with a branch in Washington was not busy. He caided the operator.

"Snortkins," he said, "get up Robinson [the Washington partner] and have him send a man to the State Department to get Alexander W. Terrell's address. I'm in a hurry."

The telegraph operator ticked off the message. The firm's Washington office was near the Department of State, and within half an hour an answer was received from Robinson. It was: Swith, New York.

"Well," said Smith, "I am jiggeredi"
